<td>8:30 a.m.</td>
<td>Trial Practice Demonstration — United States ex rel. Baklid-Kunz vs. Halifax Hospital Medical Ctr., et al., (M.D. Fla. 2014).&lt;br&gt;This case study is a qui tam case brought by a compliance professional at Halifax Medical Center of Daytona Beach, Florida. The government initially declined to intervene in the case, but later partially intervened relating to: liability for the hospital/physician arrangements, including compensation above fair market value, and remuneration that took into account the volume or value of referrals. The case involved significant litigation activity between the relator, defense and government counsel before a settlement on the eve of trial for $85 million and later on remaining medical necessity claims with the relator for an additional $1 million. The issues litigated in the case and decisions by the Court involved application of privilege and the crime fraud exception, the scope of the Stark law and the conditions of payment necessary for liability under the False Claims Act, obstruction of justice and the Defendant’s responses to discovery. Halifax has far-reaching implications for physician/hospital arrangements, the limited utility of advice of counsel, and the prohibitive expense of discovery and litigation and the risks associated with False Claims Act matters.</td>
